

Solution:

When a company usually record a sales transaction, it must also record a transaction for the decrease in their inventory. This transaction is usually considered as a must to-do after recording the purchase, because we need to keep the track of the inventory that remains available for the sale, after the sale transaction has been completed.

In this way, we can accurately and easily keep track of all the items that are currently present in the inventory.